The Miraculous Nourishing Oil

Jojoba oil has been widely used by the Red Indians

The Discovery of Jojoba Oil

Jojoba (pronounced ho-ho-ba) is a native plant of Mexico. Its seeds can produce oil which is extremely nourishing for the human skin and hair. Hence, it is known as a "magic shrub".

Three centuries ago, an American traveller discovered that the hair of the native Indians in South America deserts was remarkably shiny, smooth and soft despite living under the scorching sun. He then found out their secret was actually jojoba oil.

Since 4,000 years ago, the American Indians have begun to use the natural oil pressed from jojoba seeds to rub their faces and hair for counteracting the drying effects of the desert sun. They also use the oil to treat cuts, sores, bruises and so forth.

The manufacturers in Europe, the United States, Japan and other countries also have incorporated jojoba oil into cosmetics and skin care products to enhance their effectiveness. For more than three decades, countless proven results have been seen. Therefore, jojoba oil is recognized by the medical and beauty professions as the safest and most effective skin remedy.

Uncover the Mystery of Jojoba Oil

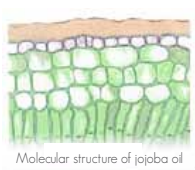

Do you know that jojoba shrubs have gender difference too? There are male and female shrubs; and only the female shrubs can produce fruits and seeds. However, out of every 10 shrubs only 4 are female. Each jojoba shrub needs approximately 15 years to reach its full maturity and begins to produce fruits. All of these have made it a very precious plant.

Jojoba oil is not really an oil, and in fact it is a wax despite its name! Scientists have discovered that jojoba oil is a golden liquid wax ester which can prevent excess evaporation of the skin's moisture. Jojoba wax ester is extremely stable. It will not decompose upon exposure to strong light and heat, not easily oxidized nor turn rancid.

More importantly, the molecular structure of jojoba oil is very similar to human sebum (the skin's own moisturizer). It will be immediately absorbed after being applied to the skin, leaving no residue, no pore-clogging, no greasy feeling and no allergies. It is suitable for all skin types.
